

Christine Cunningham—Cord Management Project

Lucky for me, I inherited a wonderful classroom from my colleague! Cord management is NOT an issue. Each table has two computers with all of the cords running underneath in U-channels. The cords are not color-coded or numbered, but with only two computers per table, it is not too difficult to troubleshoot. I have a set of tables running down the middle that cover all cords, plugs, and outlets. My plans for the summer (if they'll let me in!) are to pull everything out and number the cords to correspond to each computer's station number and zip tie extra lengths of cord. I would try to accomplish this goal now, but between teaching, family, classes, and editing a yearbook, my minutes of free time are few and far between. Plus, I wanted to "live with" the classroom for a year and see how I wanted to change it at the end. So far, this room has been VERY user-friendly.
